

We are pioneering a model where nonprofits and businesses partner to do good.

We identify missional businesses who employ people in marginalized societies.

We work with local leaders to find solutions to their community's greatest needs.

We meet those needs until the businesses can afford to holistically care for the greater community.

Jobs are a good start, but by working together, we can do even more.

physical:

Caring for our bodies is the first step toward caring for our world and each other.

Good nutrition at our workplaces means daily lunches and clean water. Even beyond healthy bodies, sharing meals together creates healthy community.

The quality of our buildings—workspaces, transitional housing, and childcare facilities—elevates our expectations for clean, safe, and beautiful environments.

Access to good medical care is a basic human right, which is why emergency and preventative healthcare for artisans and their families is so important.

financial:

Empowered people can work their way out of poverty.

Micro loans and saving programs empower people to manage their finances and plan for the future.

Vocational training is the first step in transforming lives and communities, because it tells people they have worth and purpose spiritual:

At our very core, we need to feel that our lives have meaning.

Counseling services and weekly meetings at our workplaces create a culture of unity and initiate important conversations about truth, healing, and self-worth.

intellectual:

Education breaks the poverty cycle by changing the poverty mindset.

Education is a powerful weapon against poverty because it opens the mind to new possibilities. Leadership training, adult education, and children's schooling are essential tools for pursuing dreams.

social:

We are relational creatures, designed for community.

People thrive in community because both sorrow and joy must be shared. This is why we live in community with our artisans; they are our neighbors and friends. We celebrate together, help each other, and play with each other's children. We are a family.

2016 Goals

1. Our goal is to continue seeing lives and communities restored to wholeness. We need ongoing support for our community development projects.
2. We plan to replicate this model by partnering with more businesses and organizations around the world, expanding our message of holistic empowerment to marginalized societies.
